OLD PROVIDENCE ASSOCIATE REFORMED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH*

The first 250 years

By

Robert E. Earhart

The best way to introduce you to Old Providence at Spottswood is to begin with the Scotch-Irish pioneers settling in the area around 250 years ago.

In order to encourage settlers to inhabit and tame the frontier valley of western Virginia, parcels of land were offered at a low price to get settlers on the frontier; asking only about twenty-five dollars for a hundred acres. The two original land grants in our area were to William Beverley in 1736 and to Benjamin Borden in 1739. The Beverley-Borden grant line crosses Route 919 at or near its intersection with Route 838 one-half mile south of Old Providence. This grant line follows Route 838 north-west down the hill until the state road turns to the right on a curve. Just beyond that point the grant line turns magnetic north for a distance of approximately eight miles to a point north-west of the community of Middlebrook before it changes direction again.¹

The stone church is located on a portion of the 330 acre tract originally purchased by William Robinson in February of 1740. An adjoining original tract containing 340 acres on the north side of the Robinson land was purchased by Robert Ramsey in October of 1740. The stone church and both cemeteries are located on the Robinson tract while the existing brick church is located on the Ramsey tract. Patrick Hays purchased his original tract of 600 acres joining the south-east sides of the Robinson and Ramsey tracts in 1741. The Robinson and Hays Tracts are on three of the four corners of the southern boundary of the Beverley grant.²

Robert Alexander bought 314 acres joining the north-east side of Patrick Hays in 1747. The Robert Alexander home, also listed on the National Register of Historic Places is 1.3 miles east of Old Providence.

In an unpublished research paper entitled "SOUTH MOUNTAIN MEETING HOUSE-FOUNDED PRIOR TO 1743" by Rev. Howard M. Wilson, he says in part:

"Accordingly Mr. Craig's Record of Baptisms shows his effort in this area beyond his congregation. He baptized Robert Patterson's child Abigail and Jeremiah Herison (an adult person) "near Halfway House" on November 3, 1740, only one month after his arrival in Beverley Manor. The following month, Tuesday, December 9th, he baptized John Brown's child William and Samuel Doak's child David at North Mountain; and the following day, December 10th, "at Patrick Hays" baptized James Fulton's child Elenor and Patrick Hays, child Hugh. Two months later, Tuesday February 3, 1741, "at John Moor's Burdon's Land" he baptized John Moor's child Margaret, Robert Dunlap's child Samuel and William Lockridge's child James."

These records indicate the beginning of religious work by Rev. John Craig that resulted in the South Mountain meeting house. This house of worship had been constructed before June 30, 1743 for on that date Mr. Craig baptized 'at South Mountain meeting house' children as follows: Patrick Hays' child Rebecca, James Greenly's child Samuel, William Mitchell's child John, William McCandless' child John, Samuel Dunlap's child Jean, Richard Cousard's child Jenet, George Breckenridge's child Alexander, and John. Doage's (Doak) child Thankful. The brief records, the names and the traditions indicate that this house stood near a corner of the two great colonial land grants to Beverley and Borden in the Valley of Virginia.

The South Mountain meeting house was not long, if ever, without dissension in her ranks. The first discord, no doubt, was over the revival issue of the day, in which the 'Old Side' fought against revivals and the 'New Side' promoted them vigorously. The Rev. John Craig was definitely 'Old Side' in his beliefs. A 'New Side' minister, Rev. John Blair, sent out by the New Castle Presbytery in 1746, came into the settlement and formally organized a Presbyterian meeting house and called it 'New Providence'. At the same time 'New Side' churches were organized at North Mountain, Timber Ridge, and Falling Springs. (Foote's Sketches of Virginia, I, 119) Dr. Archibald Alexander, President of Princeton College, writing of his grandfather for whom he was named, says that his grandfather's church in Pennsylvania, divided into two, and the friends of the revival built a new house of worship, which they called Providence. From this many families emigrated to New Virginia, settled together, and built a meeting-house, which they called New Providence." (Life of Rev. Dr. Archibald Alexander by Dr. James W. Alexander, page 6.)

It is significant that Mr. Craig continued to serve some of the families of the settlement, but his last reference to the 'meeting house' was in June 1746 when he recorded the baptism of Richard Couser's child Nathaniel 'at South Mountain meeting house'. (Richard Couser was the progenitor of the present Couser ministers of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.)

Mr. Craig and his 'Old Side' adherents continued to worship 'at South Mountain', whether in the meeting house or not is not stated, for in 1747 and 1749 he records the place of his baptisms were simply as 'at South Mountain'. In 1747 he baptized

John Rusk's child Margaret, Samuel Dunlap's child John, and Alexander Smeily's child Walter. In 1749 he baptized Robert Ramsey's child Sarah, John Tate's child, John, William Moor's child Andrew, Andrew Dunkan's child Elizabeth, John Lowey's child John and Richard Couser's child James. Unfortunately for our story, Mr. Craig's Records of Baptisms ends in 1749."

Now we pick up the history of the Presbyterian settlement from an early history of the New Providence Church as follows:

"One of the very first things the good people of that olden time thought of, and made provision for, was the public worship of God. In this respect the history of almost every Presbyterian settlement, over all the land, is the same: as soon as possible they built churches and school-houses, and endeavored to obtain the preaching of the gospel.

The people of this settlement, extending from the South to the North Mountain, and from near Timber Ridge to the present neighborhood of Bethel, built their first log church at or near the spot now occupied by Old Providence Church of the Associate Reformed Synod, which many years subsequent to this time seceded on the account of the introduction of Watts' Psalms and Hymns, rebuilt on the old site, and called the church 'Old Providence'. When this first church was built, or how long the people continued to assemble there, there is no means of determining."

The "first church" apparently refers to the South Mountain log church. The account gives some dates concerning the first pastors and then continues as follows: "These calls must have been made some time in 1747, while the people of New Providence continued to worship at their first log building. There the organization was elected, and at a congregational meeting there assembled the first call for a pastor was made out. For according to Mr. Samuel Houston, the union with Timber Ridge to procure supplies until they could get a permanent pastor, was made about the time of the building of the second house of worship, and must have been subsequent to the year 1748, when the unions above were existing.

When about to erect this second building a change of location was agreed upon, in order to accommodate the settlers on Hays' and Walkers' Creeks, who felt the old church was too far from them, and urged the selection of a more central point. Through the influence of Mr. John Houston, his neighbors were persuaded to meet those from the other part of the settlement at the new site which the latter had selected. The result of this conference was the building of the second log church. This stood on the hillside across the creek from where the present church stands." The second building and its location reinforces the original location as the South Mountain church.

The account continues: "The first school in the bounds of the congregation was near the first log church, where Old Providence now stands. Among the pupils who attended this school were Samuel Doak, John Montgomery, Archibald Alexander, James Houston, William Yale, Samuel Greenlee, and William Willson. Its first location was about two miles southwest of Greenville, where it was established by Robert Alexander, already mentioned. This was in 1749. After Mr. Brown became pastor of New Providence and Timber Ridge, and established his home near Fairfield, the school was removed to that neighborhood, where its site can still be pointed out. This was the germ from which grew Washington and Lee University".³

Another account of the school is as follows: "The first classical school west of the Blue Ridge was opened in 1749, by Robert Alexander, two miles southwest of the present village of Greenville. The teacher was educated in Edinburgh, it is believed. He emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1736, and to the valley in 1743. How long Mr. Alexander conducted the school we do not know. He was succeeded by the Rev. John Brown, and the school was removed first to Old Providence, then to New Providence, and shortly before the Revolutionary war to Mount Pleasant, near Fairfield."⁴

In speaking of the school another account states: "The first classical school west of the Blue Ridge was opened in 1749 by Robert Alexander. The log cabin, doubtless of a single room, is said to have stood on the farm immediately north of the churchyard of Old Providence."⁵

Thus the first log meeting house has now produced positive fruit in the form of another church, New Providence, some five miles away and the beginnings of Washington and Lee University in Lexington, now known nationwide.

After the New Providence group had withdrawn, the residue continued worshipping in the old "South Mountain Meeting House" perhaps in a weakened condition but determined to preserve their religious beliefs.

The South Mountain group presented a call thru the Donegal Presbytery to Rev. Samuel Black on March 27, 1745. On April 4th Rev. Black accepted the call and was "transported". Rev. Black failed to comply with Presbytery action and was reproved on September 2, 1745. The pastorship was dissolved by the Presbytery on September 25, 1745.⁶

The Hanover Presbytery Minutes contain numerous reference from July 12, 1758 thru September 25, 1760 in seeking supplies. Supplies appointed at various meetings were Rev. John Craig and Rev. Samuel Black. On October 4, 1759 South Mountain is shown as sharing the ministerial services of Rev. Black with North Mountain (now Bethel). In 1760 the minutes show that Hanover Presbytery recommended the sharing of South Mountain with Brown's (now Hebron) with North Mountain. The last mention of South Mountain as a congregation was when Samuel Black was appointed, September 25, 1760, to supply at discretion. This appointment was fulfilled.⁷

This arrangement must have been unsatisfactory as on October 12, 1762 a petition from Augusta, Virginia went to the recently organized Associate Presbytery seeking supplies from that source. The name of the congregation was now Old Providence.⁸

From 1765 until 1780 six pastors supplied and the seventh one supplied from 1820 until 1822. It was in 1783 that the first full time pastor was installed. From that time to now, 199 years, 14 pastors have served faithfully at Old Providence. One pastor, Rev. Horatio Thompson, D.D. served fifty-one years, the first five were as a supply before being installed.

Dr. John Rodgers, who served both the Old Providence and Timber Ridge Associate congregations from 1783 to 1790 also showed an interest in education, enough that in about the year 1803 he donated fifty-five volumes of Calvinistic Theology in Latin and Hebrew to Washington College (now Washington & Lee University). This was the first donation during the first seventy years of the existence of the college. His installation as the pastor of these two congregations constituted the oldest pastorate in the Southern Synod (Reformed).⁹

In 1793 Old Providence bought its first property from Patrick Hall and his wife Susanna. This property containing two acres, one rood and twenty perches was bought for two pounds, sixteen shillings and three pence, current money of Virginia. This initial parcel of land also listed two sides of the existing graveyard located at the rear of the stone church in the survey, thus reinforcing the idea that the original log church was in the immediate vicinity.

Old Providence is using the 1793 date for the stone church based on the first property purchase and also the year 1742 for the start of religious worship based on the records of the South Mountain Miting House baptisms.

The earliest known existing description of the stone building and the area and its people is in a document credited to a daughter of Robert and Mary McCormick, Mary Caroline Shields, who married Rev. James Shields May 11, 1847. She died March 8, 1888.

A portion of that undated document is as follows:

Old Providence is the name of the church which in the early days the McCormick family attended. It is what is called the Seceder Branch of the Presbyterian where close Communion is practiced and nothing but R (ouse's) version of the Psalms is sung. This fact alone accounts for the strict moral training of the McCormick household which has brought forth such good fruit in the later years.

The old Stone Church was built in Revolutionary times (1793) and is still standing, tho no longer used as a place of worship. It is now inhabited as a dwelling house for two poor families which we do not think right. It should still remain sacred to God and in memory of the McCormick family. A new and more modern church has been erected opposite the old one (the brick church of 1856).

The original church was height to eves not over 12 ft. walls of blue limestone. Dimensions were 30 by 70 ft. The ceiling was formed of boards and the almost flat walls were whitewashed. The door was in the center of the building with the pulpit just opposite the door so that the minister had most of his audience on the right and left hand pews in front. The small windows with which the church is pierced are furnished with green blinds. There has been a gallery reached by outside stairs and was used for colored servants. At the right of the pulpit on the opposite side is a small window not like the others. This was inserted by Robert McCormick for the sake of giving more light to his family pew, it being in a rather dark corner. It is a twelve light window with 8 by 10 glass and now serves to give light to a small bedroom for the family making their home there. (McCauleys) (Rowan in the other side -store in center run by William Rowan and McCauley).

There is always something sad in turning over a church building to any other purpose than to that to which it is dedicated. It seems like sacrilege to see this old place of worship where the pure Gospel was so long preached and where so many of God's chosen ones worshipped Him so reverently through so many generations turned to secular use. The voices of worshippers should protest against it. We want the building to stand unmarred as it was in those days.

To the rear of the church is the old cemetery now little used. It has served its purpose as the last of the old families have found a final resting place there. All that generation of the McCormicks lie there, some of the grave dates exceeding a century. The place is surrounded by a low stone wall with a wooden coping of shingles all rotten and decayed. An old dead tree has fallen on the wall with two-thirds of the trunk over the cemetery. An old gate in the last stages of decay hangs outward at an angle of 45 degrees. The ground is thickly grown over with grass and weeds, interspersed with roses and violets, showing that it was better cared for at one time. In the center of the grounds stands a tall and imposing granite obelisk erected by Cyrus and Leander J. McCormick, marking the resting place of their father, mother two brothers and sister. (See the stone for dates.)

Grandfather and the relatives who came over from Ireland... (several unreadable words)...worship and asking God's blessing at meals were not neglected when the men were away. The children were required to learn the catechism & Bibles verses. The Bible was the book of all books and was even used as a reader at school.

When our grandfather came to this country he and his relatives went to New Providence. The Psalms of David were sung in all the churches then. After some years, there came a strange minister who introduces Watts Hymns. Grandfather thought nothing could be sung in worhsip but Psalms, so as soon as the hymn was announced grandfather took his hat and walked out. Others followed him. The old Irish Presbyterians determined immediately to build a church in which worship could be conducted in that way, which in their mind, would be most acceptable to God and the upbringing of his church. So grandfather proposed to give the ground off one side of his farm, also to give the timber and stone off his farm. In addition to what he gave, grandfather also boarded the workmen part of the time, if not all the time, the church was being built. (She must mean Grandfather Hall as the property was obtained from him.)

The church was still then and still called Old Providence, and the people were called Seceders. Grandfather was an elder in this church. My father and mother were for many years members of Old Providence Chuch and all their children were baptized in this church except sister Amanda. She was a child they were connected with New Providence and sister Amanda was baptized by Rev. James Morrison."

Miss Anna M. McCutchan in her "Reminiscences of Old Providence Associate Reformed Church" written in 1935 stated that she could remember the stairs running up either end to galleries, but not to the sounding board over the pulpit.

We have in our possession the rough draft for repairs to the stone church which reads in part as follows:

"Article of agreement entered into this day of 1845 between James Rowan, James Callison, Archer A. Moore, Andrea A. Wilson and Ro. Brown as Trustees of Old Providence Church on the first part & Samuel Houser &c of the other part witnesseth that said Houser contracts & agrees with the said J. T. Rowan &c Trustees to perform certain repairs & c on said Old P. Church in the following manner and prices to Wit-Repairing study house (putting on new roof, joint shingles &c, repairing floor, repairing ceiling overhead, putting new log in study house where necessary, all of which repairs to study house said Houser is to perform for the sum of twenty-six dollars.

Building one gallery stairs to the church aforesaid, the sills, posts, flooring - railing & banisters, steps &c are to be of locust or Black Walnut well dried or seasoned, the flooring at head of steps is to be water tight & to project over the frame at least six inches to protect from the weather - the banisters to be let in the upper railing by a mortise & to be saddled & forked on the lower railing, the floowing of said stairs at top, to have sufficient slope from house to let water run off. for the sum of twenty one dollars- Repairing other gallery stairs now standing, putting brace from still bottom necessary repairs for the sum of five dollars - Repairing two doors with facings &c four windows for church & also one window for session house in all for the sum of three dollars -Glazing all said windows for church & study house for the sum of two dollars - repairing one window blind for seventy-five cents putting new plank &c on gable end of study house for the sum of one dollar all of which work is to be done well, materials hauling &c to be found by & at the expense of said workmen excepting one dollar 25 cts. for hauling planks."

The cemetery mentioned by Mary Caroline Shields is now quite a bit different than it was in her day. The walls are now between five and six feet tall and have been capped with quarried Connecticut granite furnished by the McCormick family. Practically every person who has been at Old Providence in their younger days has enjoyed the challenge of walking around this cemetery on top of the stone wall. Until approximately twenty years ago, this cemetery was unique in that it was the only one in the local area that you had to climb over the top to get inside. It has a built-in stone stile with slabs of granite projecting thru the wall permitting you to walk up one side and down the other. It now has an opening thru the wall to facilitate getting a power lawn mower inside. This move was also appreciated by those unable to cross the wall.

It was during the time of Dr. Horatio Thompson's pastorate that the records show that for some time two denominations were using the church for worship services. Our session books do not indicate separate services for the worshipers. On March 16, 1844 Dr. Thompson was able to consummate the two Presbyterian groups Viz: The Associate and Associate Reformed into one group. The minor doctrinal differences were overcome and the congregation by an unanimous vote (with two exceptions) united together and became a member of the First Associate Presbytery of the Synod of the South.

Dr. Thompson was also able to get this Synod meeting to come north and to meet at Old Providence in 1857 for the first time. An account of this accomplishment was as follows:

"Well do we remember one of his Synodical journeys, when he, in 1856, took a run of perhaps a thousand miles through Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama and North Mississippi, to attend a meeting at Starkville. He was rewarded for this by getting the Synod to his church at Old Providence the next year, 1857, a meeting which attracted so much attention, that the inhabitants, irrespective of church connections, came swarming from mountain and valley and crowded up the church and church grounds on the Sabbath. Some estimate of the number present may be formed from the statement that two young men, more curious than devout, counted the horses which were hitched on the adjacent grounds, and found the number to be two thousand and one hundred."10

Today we have to use our imagination to understand some of the situations that our frontier forefathers had to cope with. Dr. Thompson was pastor of both Old Providence and the Associate Church (Brick) at Timber Ridge from 1833 until 1882. For a time he also had a third church, the Ebenezer Associate Church on Kerr's Creek west of Lexington. His travels were quite extensive and so dangerous when traveling alone that he purchased and carried a pistol. One recorded account was as follows:

"On another occasion, whilst passing through an Indian country, he was benighted. Being very weary and sleepy, he applied for lodging at the hut of an Indian; but as her husband was absent, the squaw told him that she could not possible accommodate him. Finally, however, after a great deal of pleading and insisting, he obtained lodging for the night. Having partaken of a frugal repast, he retired to rest in the only bed on the place, which was concealed by curtains, which were drawn around it from the top to the bottom of tall posts. He had not retired long when the squaw's husband returned, accompanied by two or three men. The subject of this sketch overheard the conversation which took place between the husband and wife concerning the stranger in the bed, immediately after which the old man came to the bedside and softly drawing away the curtain, put his ear close to the occupant to see if he were asleep. This aroused suspicion and caused no little anxiety, which was very much intensified by the old Indian's going to another part of the room and taking from the crack a large butcher knife. With this in his hand, he returned to the bedside and reached over as in the act of striking. This caused the occupant to fairly tremble for his life; he seized his pistol which lay under his pillow, and was just in the act of shooting, when the host drew a piece of dried venison from a crack just beyond the bed and retired to the fireplace. From this he chipped off with his big, frightful knife his own and his companions' supper. This harmless operation quieted the Doctor's nerves, and soon they were all fast asleep, he in the bed, and the rest on skins which were spread upon the floor. The next morning his host proved his friendship by sending him on his way rejoicing."¹⁰

Besides his pastoral work, Dr. Thompson was elected a member of the Board of Trustees of Washington & Lee University in 1840. For forty-one years, and to the day of his death he served in that capacity. He also served for a time as Prof. of Belles Lettres and Rhetoric. During the Presidency of Gen. R. E. Lee, it was his privilege to be on intimate terms with him, and often to dine at his table. It is interesting to note that for his funeral in 1882, his pall bearers were Gen. Custis Lee, President of Washington and Lee Faculty (Gen. Lee was also the eldest son of Robert E. Lee as well as Grandson of Martha Custis Washington), Professors Nelson and Harris of the same institution and Elders Callison and Brown and others of the Old

Providence Church.¹⁰

During the 1850's a classical school for young ladies' was conducted in the building under the leadership of Misses Mary and Jennie Pringle, granddaughters of Dr. Alexander Bullions of Cambridge, NY. Dr. Bullions was also Dr. Horatio Thompson's pastor. Little is known about this school but during the past year historical information has been located indicating that it was called Oakland Seminary. We have portions of a handwritten newsletter which also contains several names of the students. Apparently the Civil War caused it's closing.

In 1887 the Valley High School, the first high school in this part of the county opened under the auspices of Old Providence, and continued in the stone building until it was incorporated with the public school system at a new location within the village of Spottswood. A brochure for the 1888-89 year shows a total of 35 enrolled for the year, 29 male and 16 female. Prof. R. A. Lee was the head master, Miss S. M. Lee and Rev. J. M Schreckhise was listed as other instructors. Courses offered were spelling, arithmetic, geometry, algebra, history, English grammar, geography, reading, physiology, trigonometry, and botany. Also offered were Latin, German, French and music - both vocal and instrumental. The tuition per nine month term ranged from $18 to $45 depending on the subject matter. Board per month was $10 but private families in the area would provide board also. The church has a photograph of the football team, but no one in it is identified.

In 1935 the McCormick family provided funds to construct a raised stone walled walk and a stone bridge connecting the old church and walled cemetery. The tin roof was replaced with wooden shingles at the same time. The mortar work on the bridge and the cement work in front of the church contain the initials "OCG", a well known craftsman from the Vesuvius area. In the 1960's the entire area between the church and old cemetery was drained by installing a large concrete pipe thus making it an excellent outfield for a family ball game. The spring in this area which provided water for both the stone church and the first brick church was connected to this drainage system also.

The structure served thru the years as a social center for the church and was used extensively thru the 20's and 30's for a church bazaar affair known as a "White Sale". The older generation for miles around still remember the good times and meals obtained in the building. Most older members still remember the suppers with home-made ice cream of favorite flavors hand turned in five gallon freezers. Some will also admit that it was easier when the freezer handle was turned by the rear wheel of a automobile.

On April 17, 1959, fire of an apparent electrical short destroyed the stone building leaving most of the stone walls standing. The caretaker was able to get inside briefly but the fire progressed to the wooden shingle roof and all was destroyed in a matter of minutes, even the wooden floors. Besides the history and memories destroyed, so were several pews from the first brick church as well as some benches possibly handmade for the stone structure.

The deteriorating stone walls were such a safety hazard that they were also pulled down to prevent some unsuspecting sightseer being injured by falling debris. The danger was abated by enclosing the ruins with field fence.

The remains were enclosed using trussed roof spans resting on reinforced side walls and by putting doors and windows in the openings. This action protected the ruins from further deterioration until the congregation could plan the future of the building. As funds became available, the building was rebuilt to provide a structure that could be useful for the church community and also resemble the building before the fire.

An inner-structure was put inside the stone walls for convenience and concealed lighting was installed along the top side of the walls. A balcony was put across the north end of the building with each end under it enclosed to provide a complete kitchen under one end and rest rooms under the other. The ceiling is high and sloped on the long sides to resemble the original. The floor is now flagstone and the heat is electric baseboard.

During this spring the outside stone walls have been re-cemented and a sealer added which restored the stone to its original appearance as well as strengthening and protecting for the future. The stone masons are now restoring the walls of the old cemetery and it is hoped that they will be completed by early next year.

In 1856 a brick church was built across the public road from the stone church stands and was located in the area of the paved parking lot in front of the cemetery there. The front of this church faced the stone church. At the rear of the church, just in front of the first row graves, was the location of a brick session house. The location of the front door of the church was marked by a granite slab until just a few years ago when it was removed in preparation for paving the area for parking. The congregation still has an architect's original proposal for a church to be built there. The inside of this building was described very well in a document prepared by Mrs. Anna M. McCutchan in 1935. That description was as follows:

"My memory clusters around the first brick church. The dedicatory sermon of which was preached by Rev. Wm. Pinkerton (of) Mt. Carmel Church - Deut. 5:29. This church was 3 long windows on either side 2 large white pillars in vestibule, stairs running up either side from it to galleries was set aside for colored people but after slaves were freed so much room was not needed and most of it devoted to the main Sabbath School but for a class taught for colored people when needed.

Mrs. E. J. Rowan class of girls in far corner, of gallery, two long pews at side for two classes, one or more near entrance. Mrs. J. H. Callison and Mrs. R. J. Williams with main Bible Class and young ladies at end. When school outgrew these quarters, moved down in church. This proving unsatisfactory was one of the reasons for building the new church."

This first brick church was torn down after the present church was built across the road from it. The architect for this new building was O. H.

Miller of Washington, D.C.

The present church with room to seat 500 and using an Akron interior design is built around a full steel structure with the exterior walls being brick with a backing of hollow clay tile. The original slate roof has been replaced with one of metal and the Delco lighting system has been replaced with oil and automatic controls. Electric baseboard is in the basement rooms as well as providing supplemental heat in portions of the above ground structure.

The basement with three sets of outside stairs and two inside has been modified to include carpeted Sabbath School rooms with accordion type folding partitions which can be opened to permit seating of over 200 people for meals or for other activities. For several years this basement area has been used as a pre-school for three and four year old children of the area during the public school terms.

On the ground floor two unusual features are a sky-light in the small auditorium and a "carriage" drive-thru at the side vestibule entrance. A curved vestibule inside connects this side entrance with the main entrance from the two story portico. The entire inside design focuses on the pulpit and choir in the front corner. The four aisles of the sanctuary radiate in a sunburst pattern from this corner across the elevated floor. A large arched top window with smaller flanking windows is on one side of the sanctuary, and is known as the Cyrus McCormick memorial window. The McCormick family was very generous in assisting in both the planning and the building of the church.

In August, 1972 Old Providence was honored by the stone church being placed on the Virginia Landmarks Register as one of the very few Surviving Eighteenth Century Presbyterian Meeting Houses. On December 5th that same year it was also entered in the National Register of Historic Places. As this article is being prepared, it has been confirmed that another honor has been given to this landmark. State Route 919 which passes north and south beside the church has been named Old Providence Road.

The two cemeteries of Old Providence include the graves of fifteen veterans of the American Revolution and two real daughters as well as fifty-two who served (both north and south) during the war between the states.

The elevation at Old Providence is approximately 1950 feet above sea level and is within a few feet of the same elevation where Interstate 64 crosses the Blue Ridge Mountains east of Waynesboro. One-fourth of a mile north of the church the watershed changes from the James River to the Potomac thus the county district has appropriately been named Riverheads. The Rockbridge County line is only one mile south on Route 919.

From the old stone-walled cemetery you can look west thru a valley and see Jump Mountain at Goshen Pass some ten miles away in the Allegheny Mountains. The New Providence Church is located in this direction some five miles away on Hays Creek. In the opposite direction we are only about four miles from the Blue Ridge Mountains.

This landmark complex composing some 10 acres is one mile west of Spottswood where State road 620 (Spottswood Road) joins State road 919 (Old Providence Road). The buildings are an easily identifiable landmark at night as both churches are illuminated by floodlights.

Based on the South Mountain baptisms of 1742 Old Providence will be celebrating it's 250th anniversary during 1992 and 1993, the first church in our denomination to do so. The congregation of over 400 members invites you to visit the area at any time, especially during it's 250th Anniversary celebration.

A. S. Coffman's Diary — 1864

Spottsylvania May 7th

The ranks left their ditches during last night. We marched over to their ditches and stayed there until 10 o'clock that night, when we left and marched toward Fredericksburg.

8th-- Marched until nearly daylight distance 10 miles. Left there soon after sun up and marched toward Fredericksburg, it was a very hot day and we marched very hard. There was a great many men give out, and fell down in the road. We had no rations and very little water. We stopped near -----.

9th-- Left there in the morning and marched about 10 miles and dug a ditch, and stayed there until nearly dark. We then marched around in the rear of some Yanks. When it got too dark for us to execute and then we went back to our ditch and stayed there all night.

10th-- Laid there until 10 o'clock in the morning. Then the Yanks got to shelling us, then we marched down behind a hill and laid there a short time; then we marched on down our lines in a piece of pines ----- . Fighting very hard. Then we marched up to the left of our line to support Longstreet's

Corps. The Yanks were shelling the front line and killed our assistant sergeant. The Yanks then charged our right wing and run Gen. Coles brigade out of the ditches. Then our men reinforced and run them back to their line; back to the right and was now dark. We marched back 5 mi. We got there about 12 in the night and laid there until morning.

11th-- We stayed there until eight o'clock in the morning and marched to the front ditches. Then at night we were ordered back to the rear again.

Spottsylvania May 12th--

Left there before daylight and marched to the ditches again. Soon after we got there the Yanks charged our ditches and run our men out. Then our brigade fell back, formed a line and moved forward on the Yanks. Gen. Lee rode out in front of our line but some of our officers told him to go back to the rear for he was in too much danger, and took his horse by the bridle and told him we could drive back the enemy without him coming in so much danger. Our brigade soon drove them back but lost a great many men. In our Company had 1 killed and 5 wounded. That was the hardest fight had fought since the war. We stayed there in the ditch until nearly daylight the next morning. Then we fell back one mile and dug more ditches. It rained all day. The Yankees tried to run us back but could not.

13th-- Laid there all day. There has been very heavy skirmishing in front today. Spent the night there.

14th-- Laid there all day, very heavy skirmishing in front and very heavy firing on our right wing.

15th-- Still skirmishing in front, and we had one man wounded by a stray ball. It was D. M. Coiner. The Yanks right wing has fell back, and it has been raining nearly all day. It is very muddy.

16th-- Laid there all day everything was quiet in the fore part of the day. But in the afternoon the Yanks advanced their skirmishes. But our skirmishes kept them back. Our batteries fired at them a great deal.

17th-- Skirmishing all day and after dark the Yanks beat their drums and played their bands a great deal, and so did ours.

18th-- The Yanks attacked us early in the morning and drove our skirmishes in but their line of battle did not get close enough to our ditch for us to fire on them with our small arms. But our artillery drove them back and killed a great many of them. Lieutenant C. B. (Bent) Coiner was wounded by a stray ball.

Spottsylvania May 19th

Left there about the middle of the day and marched in the direction of Fredericksburg. After going 7 miles we met with the Yanks and our Regiment was engaged from sundown till ten o'clock in the night. It was a very hot place we were in the open field. We fell back from there. About 12 o'clock marched back to our same old place, our Co. lost 2 killed, 1 wounded, and 1 prisoner. The wounded was also taken. It commenced raining about 10 o'clock and rained all night and was very muddy.

Caroline May 20th

Everything is quiet in front today and no Yanks to be seen.

21st-- Left there at daylight and marched in the direction of Hanover. I mentioned it was a very warm day and we had very bad water to drink. This is a very bad country for there is no houses to see. The country is nearly all pine bushes. We passed a few very neat places after dark. We stopped about 11 o'clock in the night. Distance that day was 20 mi. or more.

22nd-- Left there before daylight, the country is a great deal better than it was. We reached Hanover about 10 o'clock in the morning and laid there until nearly night. Then we marched one mile to a place to spend the night.

23rd-- Left next day marched toward the river, and dug ditches. Distance 1 mile. Left there after dark, and marched back where we were and stayed there all night.

24th-- Left there before daylight and marched up our line, laid behind the V.C.R.R. but soon left there and marched farther up, then in the evening marched back to the Junction and laid there in the front line of battle until our men could dig ditches. It rained very hard and we had a very muddy place to stay.

Caroline May 25th

Left there early in the morning and marched to the rear and laid there nearly all day. Then we marched to the right of our lines, and dug another ditch. We had to work all night, and it rained nearly all the time. We spent a bad night.

26th-- Left there before daylight and marched to the Junction. Laid there until after sun-up. Then we left and spent the night in the rear.

27th-- Left there at sun-up and marched near Catholic Station on the V.C.R.R. (Va. Central R.R.) 10 miles from Richmond. We passed by the residence of General Wickham. It was the neatest place that I ever saw. We passed some very ----- water. We marched 15 miles that day.

28th-- Left there at three o'clock and marched toward Gaines' Mill where we fought 2 years ago in the Chickahominy Swamp. We stopped before night and spent the night there.

29th-- Laid there until nearly night then we marched to the front to see how many Yanks were there on the Marshes. Drove the Yankees in to their line of battle. Captain M ----- Prisoner. We dug a ditch during the day. We spent the night where we were the last night.

30th-- Stayed there until twelve o'clock, then we marched to the right and went to the front and turned the gun to the left flank. Our brigade had to charge the Yanks ditch but they had a very high fence about 50 yards in front of their ditch.

(6 or 8 pages lost out of little book)

G Issue 1 shirt, 1 socks, 1 drawers

Several canons fired late in the evening, no news from the valley.

June 9th-- Stayed there until late in the morning then we marched to the right --- about 2½ miles and then stopped in some pines. We are now near Gaines Mill where we fought two years ago. It is now reported that the Yankees have not been to Staunton. We got orders after dark to be ready to march at 3 o'clock in the morning. It was very warm.

June 10th--

Stayed there all day everything quiet ----- . But late in the evening there was some skirmishing in front and some artillery firing all day and night. It is still reported the Yanks are at Staunton. I wrote a letter to M. it has been very warm all day long.

11th-- Laid there all day long everything quiet in front only a shot fired once in a while and is report the Yankees has fell back from Augusta.

12th-- Laid there all day, everything quiet in front fore part of the day but in the evening the Yankees throwed some shells over us. That night we got orders to march at 2 o'clock in the morning.

Hanover and Goochland June 13th

Left there at 2 o'clock and marched up near Richmond, then marched towards Louisa Court House. We made a very hurried march but the day was cool. We marched to South Anna bridge distance 26 miles. I got very tired for the road was so dusty, so much loose sand. We are ordered to leave here at four o'clock in the morning.

14th-- Left South Anna at 5 o'clock and continued our march towards Louisa Court House, the roads were some better. We passed a great many houses. I stood the march a great deal better. We got in sight of the Blue Ridge Mts. today. Got orders to march at half past four in the morning.

Albemarle and Louisa June 15th

Left there at five and marched on towards Louisa C. H. at three o'clock in the evening, marched on towards Charlottesville, the road was very dusty we marched about 20 or more miles. I went to a private house on guard and had a very good supper. Had orders to leave at half past four o'clock (about sunup).

Amherst Co June 16th

Left there at sun up and marched on towards Charlottesville the roads were very bad, by being very dusty. We passed thru a very nice country. Camped near the Rivanna River 6 miles east of Charlottesville, distance 20 miles or more.

17th-- Left there and marched over to the railroad and got on the train and came to Lynchburg. We passed through a very hilly country also very poor. Near Tye River we passed some very nice ladies, 2 miles on the Lynchburg side. We went near 70 miles after we got to Lynchburg. We marched on to where the Yankees were. We were in a great deal of danger for awhile. Camped about 2 miles from the town.

Campbell Co. June 18th

Laid there all day. The Yankees advanced on our line a little before sundown but did not get close enough for us to hurt them much. They soon fell back leaving some dead and wounded on our hands.

19th-- The enemy fell back during last night and we started in pursuit of them at daylight. Marched through a little town called New London 10 miles from Lynchburg. We overtook the enemy at Liberty and fought them there and drove them back, it was a hard day's march. Liberty is a very nice place and a very fine country all around, only a little hilly. Liberty is twenty-six miles from Lynchburg. Also is on the Va. and Tenn. R.R. Distance 27 miles.

Bedford Co. June 20th

Left Liberty soon after sunup and marched on out the railroad. Came to a little place called Lesly 8 miles from Liberty, there were but few houses and them old. This is near the foot of the Mt. We marched on till we came near the top of the Mt. which is the Blue Ridge. The Yankees made a stand on the top. We camped on the side of the Mt. The hill was very steep and rough. It was a very hard day's march the roads were very dusty, the day very warm, but the night was very cool. We got one day's ration in the night. Most of the men wer without rations yesterday, 15 miles march.

Botetourt and Roanoke Co. June 21st

Left the mountain and marched on towards Salem. When we got within five miles of Salem we turned off to the right leaving Salem to our left. The Cavalry got into the Yankees wagon train and took twenty wagons and ten pieces of artillery and 160 prisoners. We marched very fast to get there to help them to get more, but the Yankees went too fast as soon as they got over the North Mt. We came back and got on another road leading from Salem to Buchanan. We passed through the nicest country that I ever saw. We passed through a little place called Big Lick. We marched 25 miles or more today. 22nd-- Left there about 9 o'clock in the morning and moved camp. We went to the Botetourt Spring which was three miles from where we stayed last night. We stayed there all day. It was a beautiful place, a very fine country. 23rd-- Left there at half past two o'clock in the morning and marched within three miles of Buchanan. Got there at four in the evening. The roads were very rough and dusty, distance 20 miles. After we were there about half an hour we got orders to move and we went two miles farther and camped by the side of the James River in the field.

24th-- Left there and marched on thru Buchanan and crossed the river and took the Pike leading to Lexington. Buchanan is a very nice place nearly all the houses are built of brick. We went in camp at Buffalo Creek 6 miles from Lexington. It was nearly as hot a day as I ever felt. Marched 20 miles. We also marched by the Natural Bridge. It was a great show.

Rockbridge Co. June 25th

Left Buffalo Creek at 2 o'clock and marched on to Lexington. When we went through Lexington we marched around General Jackson's grave. Lexington is a very nice place. We marched to Fairfield and camped there. We marched 28 miles today. Fairfield is a small place.

Augusta Co. June 26th

Left there at three o'clock and marched towards Staunton. Camped 9 miles north of Staunton, near Greenville. We passed thru a small place called Midway and then through Greenville. The day was very hot and the roads were very dusty. We came 15 miles. I got a pass to go home in the evening and started home half past five and went nearly home and got lost in the woods as it was very dark. The I laid down and slept until morning. I marched 16 miles after I left the army.

27th-- Left there and went on home and staid about home all day.

28th-- Stayed over to Mr. Weller's until half past five in the evening, when I started back for the army. I went down the Pike through Mt. Sidney then turned off to the right leaving the Valley Pike to my left. I found the Regiment 6 miles below Sidney on the Keezeltown Road in camp. Marched 12 miles today.

29th-- Left there at three o'clock in the morning and marched on to the place called Keezeltown, rested there for a short time then we marched towards the Valley Pike and camped in sight of the Pike. We marched 15 miles today.

Rockingham Co. June 30th

Left there at half past three and marched to the Valley Pike and marched down the Pike to the river near Mt. Jackson. We come through New Market. It was a very nice place. We marched 16 miles.

Shenandoah Co. July 1st

Left there at daylight and marched to within seven miles of Strasburg. We marched through Mt. Jackson, Slabtown, Edinburg, Woodstock. Woodstock is a very neat place. We marched 18 miles.

2nd-- Left there at daylight and marched to Kernstown five miles above Winchester. We passed through Strasburg, Middletown and Newtown. Newtown is a very nice place, we marched 20 miles.

Frederick Co July 3rd

Left there at sunup and marched through Winchester, after we got five miles below Winchester we turned off the Pike and went towards Shepards-town. We marched through a small place called Smithfield; it is a very neat place and there are more pretty ladies in it than any place that I ever have seen unless it is Front Royal. We marched 20 miles. Soon after we got in camp there was a report come that the Yankee Cavalry was coming and we marched out of camp but soon came back.

Jefferson Co. July 4th

Left there and marched back a piece and took the road leading to Harper's Ferry. We got there about 12 o'clock, there was some few Yankees on Bolaver Heights but our skirmishers are around them over on Maryland Heights. The Yankees have been shelling us all day. They have thrown some of the largest shells at us today than they ever did before. We marched 12 miles.

5th-- Laid there all day, there was some little skirmishing and canonading in front today. Our boys captured a good deal of store stuff in town.

Washington, Md. July 6th

Left there at sunup and marched to Shephardstown and crossed the Potomac River. Then we marched to Sharpsburg, then went down the river toward Harper's Ferry about 7½ miles then went in camp. We marched 13 miles today. It was very warm.

7th-- Laid there until sunup then our Regt. went on picket. We went out on the Boonsborough Road and staid there until the next morning, it rained a little after dark.

Frederick, Md. July 8th

Left there at daylight and marched to Boonesboro, then we took the Pike leading to Frederick City. Boonesboro is a very nice place. We went through Cedarville. We crossed the Blue Ridge and marched through Middletown, it is also a nice place. We staid there untill after dark then we got orders to move at once. So we did and went over the top of the mountain about 2 miles on picket - distance 15 miles.

9th-- Left there and marched on to Frederick City, marched on through and met with the Yankees about 2 miles from the city on the Washington Pike. We left, marching in around there until nearly night when Gordon flanked the Yankees out of their position, then we marched to the front and crossed the river and followed after them for a piece. Then we came back and went into camp. The Yanks left a great deal of plunder behind. Frederick City is a beautiful place. We marched about 10 miles altogether.

Montgomery, Md. July 10th

Left there at 12 o'clock in the day and marched towards Washington City, the roads were very rough and dusty. We passed through Hyattstown and through Darksburg, it was a very hard days march. We stopped about 1 o'clock in the night. I was very tired. Distance 20 miles.

Washington July 11th

Left there at sunup and marched on towards Washington, passed through a small place called Rockville. It was nearly as large as Staunton. Today was the hottest day that I ever felt. I came very near giving out about the middle of the day. We reached the forts, 3 miles of Washington about 3 o'clock. The Yankees threw some few shells at us. We stopped there and waited for further orders. We marched 10 miles. We will spend the night here. Heavy skirmishing in front.

12th-- Laid there all day, there was some shells thrown over where we were. Very heavy skirmishing in front.

Montgomery, Md. July 13th

Left here last night at 11 o'clock and marched back the same road that we came, as far as Rockville, then we took the road leading to Leesburg. We marched the balance of the night and the next day until 1 o'clock. Then we went into camp to stay until dark. We have marched -----.

July 14th-- Left there at sundown and marched on towards Leesburg, did not march very fast in the fore part of the night. Went into camp soon after sunup. We came 12 miles, camped near the river. We passed through a little town called Coolsville. We soon left camp and crossed the Potomac River and marched towards Leesburg. Camped 4 miles from Leesburg. The Yankees threw a few shells in our camp. Distance we marched today 7 miles.

15th-- Stayed there all day. Everything quiet in front.

16th-- Left there after sunup and marched through Leesburg. Took the Pike that leads to Winchester. Passed through a place called Hamilton, there was some Yankee Cavalry there; made a dash on our wagon train, burning and raking some few things, had to leave. We camped in the forts of the Blue Ridge at a place called Smokestill. We come about 23 miles.

17th-Sunday-- Left there about 8 o'clock and marched over the Blue Ridge. After we crossed the mountain we waded the Shenandoah River then we marched down towards Charlestown. Went into camp about 1 o'clock. We only came 12 miles. We have marched 585 miles up to the 18th of July.

Clark Co. July 18th

We moved camp this morning and then went on Picket. Stayed there until nearly night. Then we received orders to march back to camp, then we went to Berryville. Distance 6 miles. They had a fight at the river and our men drove the enemy back.

Frederick July 19th

Laid there until nearly sundown. Then we marched back to our first camp then we got orders to get ready to move at once. We left there and marched all night long. Got to Winchester a little after daylight, distance 15 miles.

July 20th-- Stayed there until 3 o'clock, then we went down the road about 3 miles and met the enemy. Before we had our lines formed the Yanks charged us and flanked us on the right. Our whole division broke and run back to our forts near Winchester, our loss is heavy. We stayed at Winchester until dark. Then we marched back as far as Kernstown and laid down but was soon wakened up and marched a little piece further, then we laid there until daylight. Distance today 10 miles.

21st-- Left there and marched up as far as Newtown and formed a line there and staid there until 9 o'clock, then we marched on up the Valley. Passed through Middletown, went in camp 2 miles below Strasburg at the river. Distance 10 miles.

22nd-- Left there and marched from there at daylight and went out to the left of Strasburg and formed a line of battle. Lay there for a little while, then we marched back near Strasburg, then we marched back to our old place and formed our line near the same place. Laid there until nearly night, then we went in camp there. March 8 miles.

23rd-- Laid there all day, everything quiet from the front.

24th-Sunday-- Left there at daylight and marched towards Winchester, met the Yankees 5 miles on this side of town but soon drove them back with heavy loss. We camped below Winchester, marched 25 miles.

25th-Monday-- Laid there until 6 o'clock in the evening; rained all day very hard. Marched down to Bunker's Hill, distance 10 miles.

26th-Tuesday-- Left there at sunup and marched through Darksville then on down to Martinsburg. Laid in camp a little while then we went to town and tore up the railroad. Marched 14 miles today.

27th-Wednesday-- Laid there all day everything quiet in front today.

28th-Thursday-- Stayed there all day went out to the railroad and tore up the track, all quiet in front.

29th-Friday-- Left there at daylight and marched down to Williamsport, Md, but did not cross the Potomac. Distance 12 miles.

30th-Saturday-- Left there at half past three in the morning, marched back to Martinsville by the way of Hedgesville. It was very warm. Distance 15 miles.

A HISTORY OF GREENVILLE AS REFLECTED BY THE MCGILVRAY-HANGER HOUSE, CIRCA 1818

By

Built in the first quarter of the nineteenth century, the McGilvray-Hanger house is a modest residential dwelling whose history is intertwined with the development and economic growth of Greenville, a once prosperous village located between Staunton and Lexington on US route 11. The house fronts the old Main street, now route 1205, and represents a prototypical example of a masonry, federal-style design commonly known as a "Virginia I-house". An approximate date of construction can be estimated from its architectural features, comparison to similar brick dwellings in Greenville (notably the Breckinridge-Vines house and the Smith Tavern; both built prior to 1820), and changes in property values (ie., tax assessments and sale prices). Conservative interpretation of these data suggest that the house was built between 1796 and 1818; hence, the building has stood as a Greenville landmark throughout most of the town's 197 year history.

The original structure is remarkably unaltered and represents one of only a few well preserved examples of a residential brick townhouse in Augusta County. More often than not, such residential buildings were radically modified for business use or razed to make room for larger commercial structures. Although masonry I-houses are relatively common in Augusta County as indicated by Ann McCleary in her extensive 1978 survey of historic homes (over 160 I-houses were cataloged), the majority of surviving residential I-Houses were not prominently located within the urban landscape. As such, the McGilvray-Hanger house history provides an opportune window through which to view the growth of Greenville.

Hand-fired brick laid in flemish bond and decorative cornice bricks along the roofline suggest that the house represented "high-style" for its time. The two over two rooms with a central hall floor plan is typical of federal-style houses although the McGilvray-Hanger house is unusual for its asymmetrical facade which is suggestive of earlier architectural styles. Original plaster made with lime, sand and animal hair was laid directly onto the 18-inch masonry walls in all four rooms. Three rooms have fireplaces, all with original mantels. The first floor, north room mantel exhibits fluted pilasters, cyma molded cornices and a two-panel frieze whereas the south room mantel, while similar in size and construction, is framed in architrave and rope moldings. The remaining trim includes both ovolo and cyma moldings. A two-panel door separates the south room from the center hall while board and batten doors are found for the two upstairs rooms. Six over six sash remain on the rear windows; however, the front windows were updated in the last nineteenth century.

The house was built on what was originally lot 10 when Greenville was first platted and divided into 14 quarter-acre lots and sold by Thomas and Jane Steele beginning in 1794. Greenville was the second town established in Augusta County following Staunton, although many sources describe Waynesboro (platted in 1799) as having that distinction. The land was once part of the William Beverley Land Grant of which 1546 acres was sold to Patrick Campbell in 1738. The land changed hands five times before being purchased by Thomas Steele; these conveyances as well as the early development of Greenville as described by John Brake in the Augusta Historical Bulletin (Fall, 1981). Lot 10 was first conveyed to Jacob Long in June, 1795 for "six pounds lawful money of Virginia." He sold it to David Bell one year later for the same price. In 1810, David Bell conveyed lot 10 to David Williams, who also owned two adjoining lots to the north.

During these early land transfers, Greenville became established as a busy stagecoach stop between the already prosperous towns of Staunton and Lexington. Three roads intersected at the north border of town connecting Greenville with Staunton, Waynesboro and Middlebrook while the south road led to Midway, Fairfield and Lexington; hence, the town was uniquely situated for commerce and travel. Some of the earliest descriptions of travelers stopping at the Smith Tavern, located just outside the town limits, date back to 1782. Property taxes for Greenville were first recorded in 1801 and by 1810, the town boasted a population of 162 as compared with Staunton's 1225 and Waynesboro's 250 residents. As seen in the early plat of the town (reconstructed from Deed Book records) Greenville was built along two streets and included 38 quarter-acre lots. Each numbered lot measured 5 by 8 poles. Several lots adjoining the river were larger than a quarter acre and remained unnumbered. Lots bearing the same number were described as being either south of Main street, north of main street, or on Back street.

Lots 8, 9 and 10 on the south-side of Main street were subsequently sold to Joseph Huston in 1813 for $150. Joseph Huston and his wife Sally sold the property to James Williamson five years later in 1818 for $400. This selling price suggests that the land was improved and represents the latest that the house on Lot 10 is likely to have been constructed -- perhaps replacing an earlier structure on any one of the three lots. Given the rapid growth and prosperity of Greenville during its first 15 years, it is not surprising that several brick buildings were constructed about this time replacing log and frame structures.

The house and land changed hands again in 1822 when brothers Robert and Thomas Steele bought the property, including lot 7, for $520. Only a single house was mentioned in this transaction suggesting that much of south Main street was flanked by vacant lots. This was not unusual since the early buildings in Greenville were concentrated, for convenience sake, along the South River across from the Smith Tavern. Nevertheless, later deeds and tax assessments indicate substantial improvements on many lots located away from the river. In addition, one of Greenville's earliest established churches (Greenville Methodist) was constructed atop the hill on lot 13, south of Main street, in 1836. This development reflected the town's rapid growth between 1822 and 1836. Soon it became profitable to subdivide the original quarter-acre lots as more buildings were squeezed into the Main street landscape. Consequently, the house and lots 8, 9 and part of lot 10 (on which the house stands) were sold in May, 1836 for the princely sum of $2500 to George and John Tate. It was during this time that the house was improved with a lateral frame addition and separate entrance fronting Main street.

In 1838, the house was conveyed to Harvey and Lucy Beard who subsequently sold the house to their son, Anthony Beard in 1841 for $800. At that time, the house was assessed by the county to be worth $750 plus $50 land value for tax purposes. Anthony and his wife, Martha, lived there 15 years. The Beard family descendants of Thomas Beard, who settled in the Riverheads area in the late 1700s) was highly respected in Greenville, and at one time owned several lots on Main street. Much later, a commercial building on north Main street was named in their honor. Interestingly, Harvey Beard and his son were in business together during the mid-1830's and sold patent rights to merchants as far away as Missouri for their "Zig-zag or U-shaped steel-spring seat saddle, spring girth and iron horn." There were several shops manufacturing saddles and wagon equipment on Main street including a blacksmithing shop located directly across the street. The Beard's shop may have been located in the lateral frame addition. Together, these tradesmen worked to outfit horses and wagons for use in the great westward movement through Kentucky and Tennessee in the mid-1840's.

By this time, Greenville had developed into a prospering town and was considered to be the major marketplace for southern Augusta County. The tax lists between 1801 and 1850 indicate that ownership in town doubled (24 to 48 properties listed). Numerous businesses were founded including a distillery located just west of town (at Bethel Green, on the Middlebrook road, now Rt. 701) started in the 1820s by M. J. Bumgardner. His rye whiskey became very popular in the Valley and brought notoriety to the Greenville area. In his Gazetteer of Virginia, Joseph Martin described the town itself in 1835 as including "an extensive manufacturing flour mill, a woolen manufactory, 3 general stores, 2 taverns, 1 academy, 2 tanyards, 2 saddlers, 2 tailors, 1 blacksmith shop, 1 cabinet maker, 1 wheelwright, 1 saddle-tree maker, 3 house carpenters, 1 hatter, and 4 boot and shoe makers". In 1848, the first good road, running to markets outside and east of the valley, was constructed between Greenville and Martin's Mill in Nelson County. The plank road or Valley Turnpike running between Buchanon and Staunton was completed one year later. Unfortunately, many old, original houses in Greenville were razed to make room for further business development.

During this time of prosperity, the McGilvray-Hanger house changed hands several times and most likely housed a medical practice. Since it was customary in those days for physicians to keep an office at their residence, the lateral addition probably served as a doctor's office. The first physician to own the house was Dr. Nimrod Hitt who bought the house for $1000 in 1856, but sold it 8 months later, along with 10 additional acres, for $1500 to real estate business partners, Bumgardner and McClure. The house, minus the 10 acres, was sold in 1859 to Dr. John Tate for $2 (plus mortgage) and again may have served as a medical practice. The house was sold again on June 11, 1863 during the height of the American Civil War (only three weeks before the battle of Gettysburg and the fall of Vicksburg). The new owner was Sarah Bumgardner McGilvray, a widowed mother of 11 children, who paid $6 (plus mortgage) for the property.

The Civil War took its toll on both the McGilvray family and the town of Greenville. Alexander McGilvray, formerly a tailor, was one of the oldest members (age 56) of the confederate militia organized by Captain James W. Newton in Greenville. This unit, known as the "Augusta Greys", marched out on April 19, 1861 to become part of Company E, 5th Virginia Infantry of the "Stonewall Brigade" under General Thomas J. Jackson. Alexander McGilvray served early in the war at Harpers Ferry and First Manassas (1861) as a drummer before becoming wounded and subsequently receiving a medical discharge. In addition, Sarah McGilvray's youngest son, Lewis, who worked as a "skilled artisan", followed his uncle's steps in 1862 and joined the "Valley Guards" which became Company G of the 10th Virginia Infantry, serving under Stonewall Jackson. Lewis received wounds and was subsequently discharged; little else is known about his military history. As the war dragged on, Greenville was briefly occupied on June 6, 1864, by Union troops under the command of General Hunter. The army had recently defeated the Confederates at New Hope (Battle of Piedmont), occupied Staunton, and was presently moving towards Lexington en route to Lynchburg. While in Greenville, the union army burned the two mills to the ground.

The passing of Sarah McGilvray in March, 1865, coincided with the end of the Civil War and was followed by a period of economic depression throughout the southern states. The poor post-war economy was reflected in the settlement of the McGilvray estate which was heavily in debt to local merchants. This settlement provides a rare glimpse of a household inventory which was sold at public auction in July, 1866 for a total of $112.17. An inventory reveals the modesty of the estate and testifies to the hard times brought on by the Civil War. Among the most valuable possessions were twelve silver spoons valued at $12.50 and a feather bed with two pillows valued at $15.

Lewis McGilvray bought the house at public auction in 1882 for $1153 but it appears that he devoted much of his time living at and developing a nearby mountain resort to the east called "Cold Spring" -- later renamed, "McGilvray Park" in 1882. This park is now part of Stony Creek Resort. In his will (June, 1900), he stipulated that the house be made available to whoever in the family might need a place to live; however, it appears that the house remained vacant and passed from the McGilvray family to Roy and Olivia Hanger in 1902 for $600. The house was apparently in poor condition despite improvement with a victorian porch which appears in photographs taken as early as 1885.

Following the South's post-war depression, Greenville began to experience its greatest period of economic growth through the last quarter of the nineteenth century until the mid-twentieth century. At the height of its prosperity, the town had a public school, YMCA, hotel, bank, two mills, police station, Mason's Lodge, Odd Fellow's Lodge, two saloons, and about twenty merchants. A weekly newspaper titled "The Greenville Banner" was established in June 1882 and circulated until early 1885. An editorial in the November 24, 1882 edition noted the recent growth of Greenville remarking that "a much better variety of goods have a place in our stores now than ever known before in this town's history." In addition, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad built a station on the west border of Greenville in the mid-1880s, operating until the 1940s. The Shenandoah Valley Railroad line had been established several years earlier and was located a little over a mile to the east. These railroads helped Greenville become a major depot for cattle and agricultural goods. Berl Steele, a long-time resident of Greenville, recalls that large herds of cattle were driven down Main street on a near daily basis until the early 1920s.

This renewed prosperity was reflected in a number of improvements to the McGilvray-Hanger house. Several renovations were made to the interior including replastering damaged wall areas and modification of the stairwell to broaden it and provide a small landing in the central hall. A second frame addition, running laterally across the rear of the house, was added to provide kitchen and dining rooms.

Roy Hanger owned and operated a small grocery store and butcher's shop located across the street, but unfortunately, the Greenville economy could not keep pace with the growth of the larger cities of Staunton and Waynesboro. In addition, as automobiles became more common in the 1930s, more and more people traveled to larger cities to shop. Consequently, merchants slowly began to disappear, many of them relocated in Staunton. The Hanger family owned the house throughout this period of decline, 66 years in all, before selling it at public auction in 1968 to Earle and Bessie Shultz. Several conveyances later the house was obtained by the author in dilapidated condition. The house is registered by the Virginia Landmarks Commission (7-665) and is labeled as the "McGilvray-Hanger" house since these families owned the house a combined 105 years. Over time, Greenville has evolved into a residential community which boasts of its many older structures reflecting its early heyday beginning in the 1820s and its resurgence in the 1880s.

JEDEDIAH HOTCHKISS

Rebel Mapmaker and Virginia Businessman

As Portrayed by Peter W. Roper

By

A fascinating subcategory of military history deals with the role played by talented staff officers in the development and execution of operations by famous commanders. An example is Berthier, Napoleon's brilliant chief of staff, whose absence at Waterloo was a major factor in the fumbling uncertainty and lack of coordination displayed by the French army in that battle. Or there is the case of Lt. Col. Max Hoffman, Hindenburg's brilliant chief of staff, who devised the strategy for the battle of Tannenburg, a shattering Russian defeat which altered the course of the First World War and the shape of European history down to the present.

In the Second World War Capt. Seebohm of the German Afrika Korps commanded a radio intercept unit that provided General Erwin Rommel with deciphered British radio traffic. This intelligence enabled Rommel to hear British commands almost as soon as they were issued and was crucial for his rapid operations. When Seebohm was killed and his unit destroyed in a British counterattack before El Alamein the Afrika Korps was blinded and its subsequent performance showed it.

Americans have had their share of brilliant staffers, beginning with Henry Knox, the Boston book seller who became Washington's chief of artillery. It was Knox's incredible feat of transporting the heavy guns of Fort Ticonderoga across hundreds of miles of wilderness in the dead of a New England winter that enabled Washington to fortify Dorchester Heights and force the British evacuation of Boston. As a result the War of Independence was turned into a war of movement and an important sea port was gained for the Americans.

A more recent example is Oscar Koch, George Patton's chief of intelligence (G-2), the only Allied intelligence officer who anticipated the impending German counteroffensive in the Ardennes and warned Patton. It was Koch's insight that enabled Patton's Third Army to deliver the stunning and unexpected smash into the German southern flank that turned Hitler's brilliant scheme into an unmitigated disaster. Similarly in the Pacific Theater, MacArthur was able to rely heavily on his G-2, Charles Willoughby, for accurate information and assessments which enabled the American offensive to keep the Japanese off balance.

Our own Southern War of Independence (that so-very-uncivil "Civil War") provided several examples of talented staffers who made their mark, particularly as combat engineers. Cyrus Comstock, a West Pointer, was Grant's engineer who sited the longest pontoon bridge ever built at that time. Almost a half mile long, the bridge spanned the James below City Point and permitted Grant to shift his army southward, after months of appalling losses, to the position that McClellan had originally recognized as the key to Richmond.

Sherman's chief of engineers, Orlando Poe, was a genius at demolition and his chief's evil reputation as the Yankee Attila is mostly Poe's doing. (I have a particular interest in Poe. He was colonel of the 2nd Michigan infantry at Second Manassas and left an eyewitness account of the death of Major William Patrick charging at the head of the 17th Virginia cavalry on August 29, 1862.)

Even incompetent commanders are sometimes rescued by capable staffers. Nathaniel Banks, the Massachusetts politician turned Union general, thoroughly bungled the Red River campaign and stranded a flotilla of ten Navy gunboats up the river with the water level falling too low to float them out. The loss of the fleet was avoided by the genius of Lt. Col. Joseph Bailey, a Wisconsin logger in civilian life, who devised an improvised wing dam of stone-laden wagons that raised the water level and enabled Admiral David Porter to extricate his entire squadron.

The Confederates had capable staffers too. In June of 1861, after the evacuation of Harper's Ferry, Col. T.J. Jackson was sent to Martinsburg to destroy the B&O workshops where there were over 40 locomotives. Jackson's frugality was grieved by such destruction and he got Henry Longust, a Richmond railroad man, and Capt. Thomas Sharp to undertake the task of transporting some of the locomotives to the Virginia Central line over the trackless distance from Martinsburg to Strasburg. They did it in four days, using mule teams and portable sections of track. It was a feat comparable to Knox's transport of Ticonderoga's cannon; fourteen fine locomotives were ultimately added to the always inadequate Confederate supply.

(By the time the last locomotive, a camelback, was moved, Strasburg itself was in danger, so the locomotive was hauled all the way to Staunton where, so the story goes, it broke loose from its haulers on our hills and careened down one of the streets.)

Such contributions by staff officers in no way detract from the credit due to the commanding general: it takes a skilled commander to recognize a good idea when he sees it and to implement it effectively. In fact, the quality of a general's staff tells a lot about the quality of the commander. One aspect of Jackson's genius was his ability to assemble a staff of diverse but talented characters. His quartermaster, Major John A. Harman, was a former stage-coach operator who was a master of all aspects of transportation, including language that a recalcitrant mule could clearly understand.

Now we have a new book that delineates the career, both during the War and subsequently, of another gifted member of Jackson's staff: Jedediah Hotchkiss. The book should be of particular interest to Stauntonians because Hotchkiss was a prominent resident of this city and a major contributor to its development during the latter part of the last century.

Peter Roper, the British author of "Jedediah Hotchkiss: Rebel Mapmaker and Virginia Businessman" (Shippensburg, PA., 1992) is well qualified to write on the subject. In addition to being a competent writer and a careful researcher he is an experienced combat officer and thus can appreciate the combination of confusion, frequent boredom, and occasional terror that military operations involve. On top of that, Roper has made good use of the most complete collection of Hotchkiss documents yet consulted. A foreword to the book written by Archie McDonald, who first published Hotchkiss's war journal in 1973 under the title "Make Me a Map of the Valley", pays a deserved tribute to Roper's diligence.

Inevitably a book by a British author about a member of Stonewall Jackson's staff suggests comparison with G.F.R. Henderson's magisterial "Stonewall Jackson and the American Civil War". Roper's book is necessarily different because the greatest portion of it is devoted to Hotchkiss's business and professional activities after the War, a period of 34 years compared to his four years of military service. Nevertheless Roper shows the same respectful understanding and sympathetic analysis of the Confederate cause as Henderson did, and his book is as professionally competent and complete in its own way as the Henderson masterpiece.

Hotchkiss was born in New Windsor, New York and came to Virginia when he was 19 years old to serve as a tutor to the children of a family in Mossy Creek. Throughout his life an interest in teaching remained as a background to his numerous other interests. Northern tutors were not uncommon; Roper explains that professional opportunities were more accessible here than in the North at that time. Rufus Bailey, the founder of what became Mary Baldwin College was another example of the breed.

Many Northerners who came south in this fashion found the people and their way of life attractive and, like Hotchkiss, remained and became Southerners. After undertaking various educational enterprises from 1847 to 1860, when the decisive events of 1860 split the Union Hotchkiss cast his lot with Virginia. In June, 1861, when his school had closed, he reported for duty with the Valley Army.

His first experience was in the disastrous Rich Mountain campaign where he escaped almost certain capture and demonstrated his competence by extricating a company in an exhausting night march over rugged mountain terrain. When he had recovered from this discouraging experience and a serious bout of typhoid fever he finally joined T. J. Jackson's staff in March of 1862.

Throughout the War from that time his career reads like a novel. He served Jackson throughout the Valley campaign as a master topographer, but also as a combat engineer, reconnoitering, constructing, and on occasion destroying, roads and bridges; siting defensive earthworks; finding covered routes of access to the enemy flanks; organizing transport and clearing passages of traffic tangles; and carrying the general's commands to other units.

He was detached during Jackson's part of the Seven Days and likewise had little to do with the magnificent victory of Second Manassas, but he was again on duty with Jackson at Fredericksburg. Oddly enough his journals make no mention, either before or after the battle, of the 500 yard gap of "boggy wood" between Archer's and Lane's brigades which was so nearly breached by the Federals in their initial attack. Commentators have argued ever since about that gap: was it an oversight on Jackson's part, or was it a deliberately set trap? Hotchkiss, with his sure eye for terrain, might have made a major contribution to the problem, but there is nothing. It is a bit surprising that Roper does not allude to this question, but there is nothing in the record that even leaves room for conjecture.

After the uneventful winter at Moss Neck, Hotchkiss made major and brilliant contributions to the Chancellorsville campaign. He actually saw Lee and Jackson, sitting on Yankee cracker boxes, planning their audacious flank attack; he reconnoitered the road which Second Corps took around the Federal right; and he was with Jackson during the attack. He had ridden off to the vicinity of Hazel Grove at the time when Jackson was wounded, but he heard the shots and arrived in time to see what had happened and to fetch an ambulance and Hunter McGuire, the army physician. He then rode around the Federal lines to Lee's headquarters, and from there went to Stuart with Lee's orders to take command and press forward and unite the left wing with Lee's forces.

After Jackson's death Hotchkiss remained on the Second Corps staff, serving first under Ewell and then Jubal Early. He was at Gettysburg and played a major part in the passage of the swollen Potomac by the retreating Confederate army. He was then sidelined by illness until the Wilderness campaign, after which he served in Eastern Virginia against Grant. When Grant finally shifted his attack south of the James, Lee detached Second Corps, now under Early, for another Valley campaign and Hotchkiss went with it.

Federal general David Hunter, a would-be Sherman for destructiveness against civilians, had passed thorough Staunton, destroyed V.M.I. out of spite for the cadets' performance at Newmarket, and was menacing Lynchburg when Early confronted him with the first significant Confederate force he had met and soundly defeated him. Roper comments that "As a result of poor staff work by Early's command, the Federal forces under David Hunter were permitted to retreat into the mountains.

Here one can take issue with Roper's judgment. It is true that the total destruction of Hunter's command would have been desirable, but Hunter was as precipitate in retreat as he was fierce against civilians: Early's cavalry couldn't keep up with him. However, his decision to retreat into the trackless Allegheny instead of falling back down the Valley ahead of Early was a godsend. As one commentator put it, he retreated off the map, leaving a clear path for Early's raid on Washington which forced Grant to detach two corps from the forces facing Lee.

After the War, in the summer of 1865, Hunter had the gall to write to General Lee for what was in essence a testimonial to his strategic wisdom in retreating into the mountains.

"Was it not true, Hunter asked, that his raid had forestalled Lee from sending forty thousand men to the aid of Joseph E. Johnston? Further, did not Lee agree that Hunter had chosen the best line of retreat?"

"When Lee answered Hunter, he chose polite accuracy for his weapon. 'I had no troops to spare General Johnston, and no intention of sending him any', he said, and then courteously demolished Hunter's hopes of justifying his bungled retreat: 'I would say that I am not advised as to the motives which induced you to adopt the line of retreat you took...but I certainly expected you to retreat by way of the Shenandoah Valley, and was gratified at the time that you preferred the route through the mountains to Ohio -leaving the Valley open for General Early's advance into Maryland.'" [Quotation from Flood, Charles B., "Lee, The Last Years", 71-72 (Boston, 1981)]

Hotchkiss continued with Early's army through the daring raid on Washington and the subsequent period of decline that began with Sheridan's destructive Valley campaign. Early's riposte at Cedar Creek owed much to Hotchkiss's planning, but Early was no Jackson: his failure to keep his troops in hand and immediately exploit their success gave Sheridan time to rally his stronger force and turn what should have been a Confederate victory into a disgraceful rout.

After that it was all downhill. Hotchkiss narrowly escaped from the destruction of the remainder of Early's force at Waynesboro in March, 1865 and was in Lynchburg with Lomax's division when the news of the surrender at Appomattox arrived.

Roper has an excellent chapter devoted solely to Hotchkiss's cartographic work and other chapters supplying details of his surveys of Virginia and West Virginia mineral resources after the war. There is a fascinating account of his herculean efforts to get capital, whether American or foreign, for the development of these resources.

Two main themes run consistently through all these chapters: the energy, persistence, and genius of Jed Hotchkiss; and the total, appalling poverty of the postwar South. Not only had the Northern effort to "preserve the union" killed or crippled a quarter of the able-bodied manpower of the Confederacy, but the malignant thoroughness of the destruction of the South's infrastructure left the region an economic desert in total fiefdom to Northern capitalists. Henry Grady's famous essay on the Georgia funeral (the South had supplied the corpse, but everything else - from coffin to handkerchiefs - was made, owned, or financed in Cincinnati, Chicago, or New York) described the condition of the South throughout Hotchkiss's lifetime. In fact, the region did not fully recover from the economic effects of the War until 1945, after the Second World War, and many other political and social effects still remain.

For the rest of his life Hotchkiss was almost never out of debt. At one point he could not meet with a prospective financier because he could not raise the price of a ticket to Trenton, N.J.! He mapped and analyzed coal and iron properties and laid out railroad lines and other subsidiary facilities that today are worth millions, but little of the benefit ever went to him. His home, "The Oaks" on East Beverley St. is a magnificent house, but it is a testimony to the cheapness of labor in Staunton and the willingness of local bankers to extend credit rather than to Hotchkiss's affluence.

Roper has done a splendid job of describing this remarkable man. The book is as thorough as any scholar could desire, yet it is also as interesting and vivid as a novel.

I am not happy with Roper's title, but I can't think of a better one. Hotchkiss was not a "rebel": secession was entirely legal. When Virginia ratified the Constitution in 1790 it was one of three states that expressly reserved the right to withdraw from the union at any future time, and the 1860 act of secession used the term "withdraw" in explicit reference to that reservation.

Furthermore, Hotchkiss's service, although much of it was topographical, was far too varied in its nature and importance for him to be classified simply as "mapmaker". Likewise his numerous entrepreneurial efforts after the War were much more varied and imaginative than the simple work "businessman" implies.

No book can be totally error free. Roper has done well in that respect, but on p. 63 he mistakenly credits Col. Michael G. Harman with clearing the Potomac ford for Lee's retreating army after Gettysburg. Hotchkiss's journal actually says that it was "Major Harman, the Chief Q.M. of the 2nd Corps". That was Maj. John A. Harman, who had been Jackson's brilliant but prickly quartermaster. Roper's mistake is understandable - there were several Harmans who served with distinction in 2nd Corps - but John A. Harman already had a reputation for clearing traffic-clogged fords.

In "Battles and Leaders of the Civil War" (I, 238) Gen. John D. Imboden recalled that "I never knew Jackson to let profanity pass without rebuke but once...at Edwards Ferry, on the Potomac, when our army was crossing into Maryland in the Antietam campaign...The day was very hot and the ford was completely blocked with a wagon train...On seeing the state of affairs, Jackson turned to Major Harman and ordered him to clear the ford. Harman dashed in among the wagoners, kicking mules, and apparently inextricable mass of wagons, and, in the voice of a stentor, poured out a volume of oaths that would have excited the admiration of the most scientific mule-driver. The effect was electrical. The drivers were frightened and swore as best they could, but far below the major's standard. The mules caught the inspiration from a chorus of familiar words, and all at once made a break for the Maryland shore, and in five minutes the ford was cleared. Jackson witnessed and heard it all. Harman rode back to join him expecting a lecture, and, touching his hat, said: 'The ford is clear, general! There's only one language that will make mules understand on a hot day that they must get out of the water.' The general smiled, and said: 'Thank you, major,' and dashed into the water at the head of his staff, and rode across."

For us in Staunton "The Oaks" still stands today on Beverley Street as a reminder of one of our most productive and energetic citizens. Roper has, most appropriately, dedicated his book to Fletcher Collins, Jr. and his wife, Margaret. Those two have not only enriched the cultural life of Staunton in innumerable ways, including their assistance and encouragement to Peter Roper, but they have carefully preserved both the memory and the splendid dwelling that Jedediah Hotchkiss left. Even in the 1960's, when some would have thought it "progressive" to demolish an old house like the Oaks to provide additional parking on Beverley Street, the Collins's maintained both the house and its tradition. We are all richer for their vision.

[Note: Jedediah Hotchkiss was an officer of combat engineers in the nation's bloodiest war and later taught chemistry at Miss Mary Julia Baldwin's school in Staunton. This writer was a combat engineer officer in the nation's second bloodiest war and taught chemistry for 25 years at Miss Baldwin's institution. It is therefore a particular pleasure and privilege to pay homage to his illustrious predecessor.]
